Town Has Prominent Visitors

Bethel has been visited during August by two of the most famous sopranos of music's Golden Age, and mezzo-soprano also well known formerly at the Metropolitan Opera House—Madame Emma Eames, Madame Geraldine Farrar, and Madame Marian Telve. All three have been callers on Mrs. Finck, renewing the ties of many years standing.

While Madame Eames was born in China, she belongs to Maine, was brought up in Bath. Madame Farrar is half Maine, through her father, "Sid" Farrar, of South Paris. Madame Farrar has been making a Maine tour, visiting her father's old home town, and the birthplace of still another famous Maine singer of former years, Lillian Nordica.

Not having been in our state for some years, Farrar was one more impressed by our Maine Air, exclaiming delightedly at its delicious qualities, and adding "and you know since we have been here, we have slept like logs and eaten like ogres;" and this coming from a person who lives in Connecticut, and not in a city, is a good "ad" for us.

Republican Rally Date Changed to Saturday

The Republican Rally announced in last week's Citizen to take place this Thursday evening will be held on Saturday evening of this week at the Bethel Grange Hall.

Principal speakers will be Governor Lewis O. Barrows and Congressman James C. Oliver, both seeking re-election. Other speakers are expected. The Bethel Band will furnish music.

PRE-SCHOOL CLINIC AT SUNDAY RIVER

A clinic for babies and pre-school children was held on Thursday, Aug. 25, at the home of Mrs. Robert Bean, Sunday River. The clinic was conducted by Miss Florence Porter, Dental Hygienist of Augusta; Miss Ruth Tedford, Consultant of Nursing Division of Portland; Mrs. Ruth Hopkins of Rumford; and Dr. Harry Wilson.

A very profitable afternoon was spent with nine children present.

SERVICE AT MASON CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY

Service at the Mason Church will be held at 4 o'clock next Sunday afternoon. The service will be conducted by Rev. A. J. Verrill of West Bethel, and Dr. John Tillman of the University of Washington will speak.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PROGRAM ON NEW STATION

The Christian Science devotional programs which were formerly broadcast from the Portland station WCHS, will now be heard from WGAN at 12:30 Sunday noon.

On week days at 12:30 WGAN will give commentaries on news appearing in the Christian Science Monitor under the title, "The Monitor Views the News."

NOTE THE REFERENDUM SEPTEMBER 12

Friends of temperance should remember the responsibility for voting on the three questions relating to the legalized sale of liquors in the town of Bethel Sept. 12.

Don't write the words "Yes" or "No." Writing spoils the ballot. Make a cross "X" in the square under "No."

Let us push the saloon as far away as possible. Temperance worker and liquor dealers both know that distance reduces sales. Distance reduces temptations, opportunities, and suggestions for the young.

E. STONEHAM MILL AND HOME BURNED

Hersey & Allen Property Flat After Early Morning Fire—Bethel and Norway Called

A fire of unknown origin, which started in the Hersey & Allen mill at East Stoneham, had doomed the mill and the nearby dwelling occupied by Bernard Allen and family before its discovery about 3 o'clock Saturday morning. The machinery is said to be damaged beyond repair and considerable finished lumber, in boards and hardwood squares, was also destroyed. Although some household furnishings were saved Allen's loss is estimated at $1,000. The entire loss has been set at $17,500 with partial insurance.

The nearby buildings of Ervil Curtis were threatened and the furnishings were removed. The fire damage was confined to a corner of the barn.

The fire departments of Bethel and Norway were called and arrived at the same time. Bethel had four streams of water on the blaze and was very effective in saving lumber and drenching the ruins, thus aiding in preventing further damage when the wind came up after daylight.

People and Spots in the Late News

DON'T MUFF THIS ONE... For fashion critics heartily approved this scarab blue wool suit, trimmed with sheared beaver. Self bows tie at collar and belt, and two wide shirred bands of matching crepe are set into top part of dress underneath.

He pilots unique airplane tire-testing machine in B. F. Goodrich laboratories at Akron, O., but he'd never been up before.

ANOTHER DIRECT HIT!... Umpire "Beau" Reardon accumulated peace-maker's role just in time to catch in "bread basket" a punch aimed by Atwood (left) of Phils at Bartlett (right) of Giants, as bats instead of baseballs flew in N. Y. Polo Grounds baseball game.

Connor, Connecticut motor vehicle commissioner, who announced automotive centers informed him new 1939 models will provide 5 to 25 per cent more windshield and window area. LISTEN TO THIS

By TOM FIDALE.

If the new "Story of the Month" innovation by NBC is successful, it is very likely to set a new trend in daily radio serials. . . . The idea is to streamline the present serial drama to run for a month or six weeks, much like the current continued fiction stories in magazines, rather than to continue the same story for years at a time. . . . Advantages are an appeal to a more diversified audience by having a new story or, at least, a new situation, every month or so, precluding the possibility of a story "running dry". . . . Biggest disadvantage is possibility of losing audience because of a weak story and losing the effect of a long-time build up. . . . In any case, it is the listeners who will decide and it's an experiment worth watching.

Jane Froman

Beautiful Jane Froman, whose golden voice catapulted her from a network solo spot to leading lady of the "Follies," motion pictures and big-time radio, will visit the city that was her springboard to fame when she is guest soloist at Chicago's famous Grant Park concert late this month. . . . Jane arrived in Chicago after studying journalism and voice at the University of Missouri and an apprenticeship in radio in Cincinnati. . . . Her lovely voice, her beauty and her winning personality put her on top where she remains one of the most gracious of stars. . . . Judy Starr, Hal Kemp's 85 pound vocalist, said "I do" with Jackie Shirra, another member of the band, last week. . . . Bayard Vellier, "Valiant Lady" author, has been dubbed "Squire" by his fellow New Canaanites.

It is very possible that you may be seeing that new comedy hit, "The Laugh Liner," in the movies next winter. . . . Billy House, the 290 pound star of the show, is due in Hollywood to make another Paramount picture this fall and Jack Fulton, singing star on the show, is being eyed for the flickers. . . . House believes that "The Laugh Liner" has all of the elements for a good motion picture vehicle, and because of his long experience in the show business, it is probable that the movie biggies may agree with him. . . . Uncle Ezra's "Station E-Z-R-A" on NBC is taking its first vacation in four years. . . . Will be back on the air later this fall. . . . In the meantime, the "Jumpin' Jenny Wren" will continue to be heard Saturday nights on the "National Barn Dance."

Molly McGee

"Fibber McGee and Molly," in private life Mr. and Mrs. James Jordan, have just completed a fishing trip in the north woods of Ontario and are now off to Yellowstone National Park for a look-see at some more of nature's wonders. . . . "Molly" is practically recovered from her long illness and is looking forward to being back on the show when it returns to the NBC-Red network in its old Tuesday spot on September 6. . . . Until that time they will both continue to take it easy and relax.

Prof. William (Wild Bill) McGovern, whose Tuesday chats on NBC are swell, is one professor who should hit big time radio. . . . Adventurer, explorer, linguist, he is one of the most colorful as well as most intelligent commentators on the air. . . . Joan Kay, the Marian Moore of "Arnold Grimm's Daughter" is back from a Florida vacation. . . . Paul Whiteman's fourteen-year-old son is taking drum lessons during rehearsal each week. . . . George McCall set some kind of a record last week when he flew from Hollywood to New York to spend two hours.

The sermon given by James Philoon of Auburn was in the forenoon and in the afternoon the sermon was given by Rev. Wallace Rose, D. D., of Lynn, Mass. Both were very good sermons. Other ministers in attendance were Rev. Ernest J. Marble of Norway, Rev. William Dawes Veazie, Supt. of Union Churches, Rev. George W. Sias of Turner Center, Rev. Burte B. Gibbs of Rumford, and Rev. Ordell Bryant of Clinton, N. C. Mrs. Louie Peabody Coffin sang hymns and there was also singing by the audience.

Miss Beatrice Stoetznier and her friend, Miss Harriet Whitten of Alstead, N. H., came Sunday to the home of Rev. James MacKillop and family to spend this week end call on her many friends.

Rev. James MacKillop and daughter Thelma were in New Hampshire Sunday where he preached three sermons.

Dr. and Mrs. R. F. Willard and Raeburn Hathaway of Needham, Mass., were week-end visitors in town with Jay Willard's family and Lester and Harris Hathaway. Miss Ruby Willard, who has worked at West Poland, returned home with them to visit before returning to her school in Vermont.

BETHEL NEEDS
More and Better Sidewalks—winter
and summer
Night Watchman—All the Year
Enforced Traffic Rules

FACTS & OPINIONS

There seems to be a perennial
call for a column in this newspaper which the above title should fit as well as any. We do not feel that there is enough wrong with the community or even the State to warrant a column of criticism, much less suggestion for betterment. There is much to commend, and commendation is much more fitting in print than the tiresome harping of a critic. We have found in fact that much more can be accomplished at times by a little inquiry and study than a wholesale and frequently unreasonable appraisal of our frailties.

This does not mean that the Citizen feels that its stand for "more and better sidewalks—winter and summer, night watchman, all the year,
enforced traffic rules" is unreasonable.
Such things take time and should not be hurried when taxes and costs of government remain comparatively high. Just as conditions two years ago clinched the arguments for more adequate fire protection, so other improvements may come.

Those who witnessed the performance of the Bethel firemen and equipment at the early Saturday morning fire at East Stoneham appreciate the value of such an organization. Although a heavy property loss had occurred before their arrival, it was through their efforts that the spread of the blaze in the finished mill products was halted and the burning ruins extinguished.

This year, if past precedent holds, some 1,500 people will be cremated in burning buildings. Six thousand more will die as the result of burns and scalds.

When an airplane crashes and a dozen people perish to death, the news makes international headlines and the world is horrified.
Yet the public at large is callous to the fact that our annual total of deaths from fires is greater than the toll would be from 600 airplanes carrying to flaming doom 12 persons each.

THE BUNGLING HUNTER EXPLAINS

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Indoors... Outdoors... Wash-
day... Birthday... family history is being made.

NOT long ago a young friend of mine married. He is a camera fan, like the rest of us, and he told me:

"My family history is going to be kept in pictures. I plan to take at least one roll of pictures a week—many more whenever possible. Whenever we do anything—move to a new house—go on a week-end trip—plant flowers—celebrate a birthday or an anniversary—add a new member—whatever it is, the story will be told in pictures."

His plans go further than that, too. His picture record is to be kept in handy, useful form. "There will be a new picture book for every year," he told me. "I plan to have the best shots enlarged, and mount the others contact size. Everything goes into the book, where we'll always be able to find it and recall from our own snapshots—what we did in past days."

There, now, is an idea for all of us. In every family, things happen each day that we would like to remember. We buy new furniture, plant gardens, build a trellis for roses, put new screens on the back porch, take vacation trips. Children are born, grow up, change year by year. We change, too. And a true day-by-day picture-history of all our everyday activities, as well as activities not-so-everyday, would greatly enrich our memories in later years.

Let's make a mental note—make

Each family picture-book becomes more treasured as the years roll by.

It is a household ritual, and abide by
it. "A picture a day keeps the family history up to date. And a complete picture-book each year keeps it permanently."

Maine poultrymen have been invited to take part in the 1938 Eastern Turkey Show to be held in connection with the NEPPCO exposition in New York City, October 14-18. More detailed information is available from Mrs. Alice Wolfe Sattler, Monkton, Md.

Poultrymen who wish to have their flocks tested for pullorum disease should make application to the department of bacteriology,
University of Maine, Orono, before September 15. County agents can give further information on this testing service.

Thorough tests of so-called drug cures for Bang's disease show that they simply do not work. The most recent test was made at the University of Wisconsin. Analysis of the so-called remedies failed to reveal any material in them that could in any way be expected to effect a cure.

The revised schedule of county 4-H
contests is as follows: Somerset,
Oct. 1; Hancock and Piscataquis,
Oct. 8; Franklin and Washington,
Oct. 15; Knox-Lincoln, Penobscot and Oxford, Oct. 22; Waldo, Aroostook and Androscoggin-Sagadahoc, Oct. 29; Cumberland, Kennebec and York, Nov. 5.

Improved market outlets for American apples are expected in Europe during the coming marketing season. In England and Germany poor crops of apples are anticipated. Other European countries face prospects only slightly better. The United States, on the other hand, expects a crop about a third smaller than last year and 11 per cent under the 10-year average. Large crops are in prospect in Nova Scotia.

"Behold a Son!"

"Behold, a son!" Leah's exclamation when she bore her first son to Jacob, is the meaning of the Hebrew name, Reuben. Reuben founded the Jewish tribe of that name.
Reuben should not be confused with Rubin. The latter is the masculine form of Ruby.

Greek Actors Used Stills

The early Greek actors used a kind of stiff or wooden clog called the cothurnus, with which the actor's height was increased by several inches, and the introduction of which was credited to Aeschylus.
In comedy the cothurnus was replaced by a different kind of shoe having the same effect.

THE LOW DOWN HICKORY GROVE

Once in a while I mosey out there to the Coast, and when I do, I always go to hear a young feller there—he's from Alabama—and he has a knack of wakin' you up, that gets you.

Last Sunday he was tellin' about science, and what might be worked out to increase our average life
of 40 years, as it is now, to 70.

And medicine
and science, he says, they are not buckin' religion or vice versa. But while science, it is findin' ways to prolong life, it also is findin' ways of eliminatin'
the human race—like poison gas and such.

So when you leave the church,
maybe you don't have the answer to everything or anything, and are even confused, but pardner, you are liable to kinda halfway wonder to yourself, on the way home—what is next, after 70.

And you will maybe be a little uncomfortable, and if you are, maybe you will sit down and do some ponderin'. And a preacher who can make a person ponder, he is gettin'
some place—lookin' at the way stuff is goin' on, speed and everything—and the undertaker never gettin' half a day off.

Yours, with the low down

CHAPTER XII

A confusion of thoughts crowded Eleanor's mind in the time that passed between the closing of the forge door and the slow arrival of the motor car at the House-in-the-Glen, guided safely through the gate by Eli's lanterns. Try as she might, she could arrive at no conclusion as to the chance happenings of the night other than by natural inference or the force of logic. One thing was certain, the presence of Hess and his wife in the old forge had undoubtedly saved her children from death by exhaustion and had also set her own feet in the path she now resolved to follow.

The fear that the children's absence might have unnerved grandmother and grandfather was quickly set aside by the sight, through the window, of the couple sitting in the firelit room. That is, grandfather was in his usual chair, but grandmother, who had been keeping watch at intervals, was moving about restlessly, and the first hint that they received that the little beds were empty was the sight of the children themselves being led in between Eleanor and Will Darrow. The latter acted in the most matter of fact manner, as if the delay, about which he told in a few words, was an every day matter, regrettable of course, but of no moment.

In fact he had no chance to say more for Tommy, crying out, "It is all true! Christ-babies do come now exactly the way you said and we've found him in a stable."

Utterly bewildered and doubting whether or not she was hearing and seeing aright, grandmother gave a questioning glance at Eleanor, who looked gravely in affirmation of what Tommy said, but adding, "They must have some hot milk and go back to bed now and let me tell the rest."

"The tree! Can't we light the tree for one little minute?" begged Tommy.

"Father has not come, Tommy, better wait until morning. It will be still dark enough when you get up," said grandmother. "Eli is getting ready to drive over to the station for him now—the branch road train is due at twelve."

"Then I will go with Eli as far as the inn," said Will Darrow, who, having finished the coffee with which Hepsy had supplied him, came into the sitting room.

"Why not stay here with us?" said grandmother. "You must be worn out by such an experience."

"I shall need to sleep later in the morning than you people are likely to," he said quietly, and grandmother, noticing that Eleanor did not endorse the invitation, failed to press it.

"Please go to bed at once, or you will have a headache," Darrow said to Eleanor, as, after one long look, he hesitated, turned and walked down the hall and into the night without a handgrip or a backward glance.

As the door closed Eleanor returned to the room where the old people were waiting, one on either side of the fire trying hard to subdue the questioning eagerness of their looks. "I wish that The Stranger was here," she said simply, unconsciously missing the sense of strength that had surrounded her in his presence, her weariness showing in her voice the while.

"It is good for Emery that he has not traveled alone," said grandmother, trying to keep the tremulousness from her voice.

"There was a telegram for me, Tommy said may I have it?" Eleanor asked. Grandfather took it from his pocketbook and gave it to her.

"It has not been opened," and Eleanor looked from one to the other.

Then grandmother laughed nervously, "The truth is that the boy from the inn repeated the message about Emery's coming at twelve, as he saw it being written, so that there was no need for opening the telegram."

Eleanor cut the top of the envelope with deliberation, and spreading the sheet held it toward the firelight, the oil lamp, unused to such long hours of service, having gradually succumbed.

"Ask them not to wait up for me," she read holding up the paper. "The boy didn't say that," said grandfather, "but we are not very tired."

"Then for my sake will you both go to bed?" Eleanor asked, with a tone of pleading in her voice more impressive than any dramatic emphasis. "The Stranger will surely understand that at last I must see Emery alone and when he is not busy, here in his father's house midway between Christmas Eve and morning!"

Grandmother, who was looking steadily at Eleanor, felt all the misgivings that had held her for the last few hours slaze away. She knew then that it was not her daughter-in-law who had anything to explain, but who would ask for explanation. Helping grandfather to his feet she turned to Eleanor and placed a hand, that would tremble in spite of effort, upon her firm young shoulders. Looking up to Eleanor's slim height from her lesser one that was beginning to stoop earthward, she said gently:

"I understand also, my daughter, I know the change that has come and you may trust me. Say what you must, and say it plainly, but oh! remember that Emery is my son, my only son!"

It was not until she had gone to bed, and was listening to grandfather's quiet breathing from her own sleepless pillow that grandmother realized that when she had left Eleanor the young woman was still clad in the hat and fur coat in which she had returned.

Left to herself, Eleanor shivered in spite of her heavy coat and once more drew close to the fire. Hepsy came in, stupid with sleep, and said that she had left food for Mr. Emery's supper in the hot closet over the stove. Then Eleanor remembered nothing, until the tall clock struck one, and she started up to see if it was the hour or the half. She had been asleep.

It was half past one o'clock and Christmas morning. The grating of wheels on the frozen ground told her that Emery was coming, but not with Eli, for the hoof beats that turned the angle at the gate were those of a pair of horses of higher mettle than sedate old Whiteface. Next, Vance's voice sounded clear and sharp from the porch as he wished his driver "good-night." Checking the impulse to get out of sight and obliterate herself, now that she was sure of his safe return, Eleanor went to the door and opened it at the moment that his hand was upon the knob. The Stranger entered first and with a silent greeting passed into the firelit room beyond. The only words spoken were from Vance.

"Eleanor! Here! Thank God!"

The light in the hall was dim but it did not account for the clinging way in which his eyes first rested on her or the agony of sudden relief in his voice. He had opened his arms in spontaneous expression as he cried out, but quickly dropped them to his side, his habitual suppression of emotion dominating him.

"You are very late," she said quietly. "I see that you missed Eli, who went for you?"

"Did you get my telegram?"

"Yes, Emery."

"At what time?"

"The last arrival at about half past eleven."

"Where is Darrow? I must see him."

"At the inn. At my request he drove over with Eli. You and the Doctor would better have your supper, Emery, before we go into explanations."

"I need rest not food, my child," the Doctor answered, and the touch of his hand upon hers, as she guided him to the east chamber, banished all her fears.

Eleanor returning went to the kitchen and Emery's feet led him instinctively to the dining room.

Eleanor brought the food and spread it before him silently. He ate from mere brute hunger, not realizing what, until his eye fell on a plate of cookies that Hepsy had cut in the shape of horses for the children. Back again to youth he flew, to the days when he had made a ceremony of eating the cakes made by that same cutter, leg by leg, leaving the head with its currant eye as the last delicious morsel. Presently he took a cake and unconsciously lived out his memory while Eleanor watched him in half pitiful amazement.

The freshly fed fire in the living-room drew him to it. Over the mantel shelf was his own portrait at eight years, Tommy's age. Stiffly painted as it was, there was more than a passing resemblance. Did he hope that his boy would follow him, at least to keep in repair the financial structure he was struggling so desperately to build!

No! He hurled the thought so hard that he almost expected to hear something break within the room. Never would he condemn his flesh and blood to the slavery of such competition as that with which he struggled.

"Then why condemn yourself? Since you know the truth, the truth should make you free!"

The Stranger's voice sounded as close to him as it had the afternoon before, but with so much more power that Vance started up and looked anxiously about the room, even going to the door. Returning he seated himself facing Eleanor, who stood, one hand resting on the mantel shelf as she gazed into the fire, and for the first time he realized that she wore her outdoor wraps.

She in her turn was trying to formulate how best to break the silence.

Would Emery presently say it was bedtime, and thus the matter end as it had a dozen times before? She realized dully that he was winking his watch, one of the methodical preliminaries of his sleep. She knew precisely how his thin strong fingers were grasping the little knob as he turned it. If he would only speak! He rose from his chair, then resealed himself and said abruptly:

"Eleanor, why did you dismiss the chauffeur, or allow him to be dismissed?"

"Because he was drunk!" she answered, startled into brevity, then added quickly, "How did you know that we dismissed him?"

"That 'we,' stabbed Vance through and through, though he would have denied it.

"I telephoned the garage, hoping to secure a car and join you, being only an hour or so late for supper. I'm glad now that I could not. The answer came that no one would leave the city on Christmas Eve, with the half sneering addition that my wife had sent the chauffeur back from Westchester!"

"What did you say?"

"That if Mrs. Vance had dismissed the chauffeur it was for good and sufficient cause."

"Thank you, Emery."

Strangely enough her almost humble passivity angered him, yet anger is better, more human, than habitual querulous indifference.

"It is a most unexpected and disagreeable situation. I am willing to concede that you did not think of the consequences, but, as the wife of a man of my business connections, it would have been better to have effected some sort of a compromise with the fellow rather than start possible gossip. I wonder that Darrow was so thoughtless; he has no excuse, for he knows the world."

The spark had touched the tow.

"You wonder that Will was so careless? What then do you think of yourself?"

"Myself? I do not understand you, Eleanor."

"Then I see that I must forge the meaning into words that often say too little or too much. Your wrong is to Will even more than to me. It is nearly two years now that, by your indifference to everything concerning me, you have led, nay forced, your friend into the unhappy position of falling in love with your wife!"

"Eleanor!"

"Yes, with me, Eleanor Vance! Tonight the crisis came. Disappointed beyond expression, and too tired to resist the depression of disappointment, coupled with the recklessness of the drunken chauffeur I was driven to the mistake of tears.

Will told me that he loved me and I was glad! It is a long time since I have heard such words. Stop! you, above all men, should not blame him; instead you owe him an apology. You put him in your place as my protector, my companion, why should he not speak the words you have forgotten? He asked nothing. His was a free will gift!"

Vance, who was growing ashy white, sat leaning forward, his hands clenching the chair arms, his eyes, over which he had lost power of control, fixed on her face.

"The hurt to him is twofold," Eleanor continued, "cruel, that he has so cold-hearted a friend, and bitter since his love could only serve to stir up memories in the woman that pushed her further from his reach, and the pain lay with her to tell him of his mistake."

"When Will cried out to me in the dark, I heard his words, but the voice speaking them with tenderness was the voice of the man whom I married ten years ago. Then it was that I knew that the touch of another would be sin."

"All through the rest of those slow frozen hours my one thought was to reach you, to tell you this, and that I would not live with you in such bondage another hour! You have dominated my life out of my life by leaving nothing in it for me to do. I must find that other man who loved me and told me so, who loved me and looked love, the man whom I married that we might share and share alike and be the whole, each to the other, I must find him, or else live out my life alone!"

Still Vance sat leaning forward, immovable, his thin nostrils dilating, his teeth clenched through his under lip the blood started.

"I had hope," Eleanor continued, pressing her hand to her eyes as if to shut in a picture that sight would drive away, "until we found ourselves on the Glen highway where the great electric light hangs high over the trolley terminal and we stopped to borrow a lantern at the forge. Then presently I lost hope, for I learned there that the man I married was not only dead to me, but that he was dead also to himself. Why is Jo. ph Hess, with his wife and new-born child, taking shelter in your father's old forge on Christmas Eve?"

Swiftly, yet with incisive detail, she told of the finding of the children and of the scene within the shed.

"Hess—here—in want? His wife and baby in the old forge?"

Vance paused abruptly, his words severed as by a sword of light. Unseen by Eleanor the door from the back hall was opened slowly, and on the threshold stood Tommy, carrying a big brass candle-stick, his eyes fixed upon the candle flame, that would flicker and flare.

Seeing his father he set the light upon the floor and running to him threw himself into his arms, crying:

"Oh father! Christmas did happen ever so long ago just as you said, but do you know every year since then God has been sending Christ-babies to people who sort of forget about it to make them feel kind? Sister and I saw the Star tonight and we followed it and there, sure enough, was a dear little Christ-baby and Mary and Joseph. There wouldn't have been a thing on the baby's poor mite of a tree if we hadn't played that we were the Wise Men and took him Uncle Will's gold piece and the sweet soap for incense and the cake!"

"Now you'll take an interest in our tree, won't you, father, since Christmas has all happened over again right now—home? There's your little first red shoes on our tree full of candy, one shoe for you and one for mother, 'cause grandmother says you were her little Christ-baby once, though I guess you never knew it. She knows it all though, 'cause she talks to God, every night. I hear her in her room."

Slowly Vance's head dropped to the boy's shoulder and his arms closed so tightly about his that Tommy struggled for breath, while sobs tore at the man's throat until the agony was quenched by a flood of tears.

Very gently Eleanor released her son, who in an awestruck whisper said, "I didn't mean to frighten father by coming in so soft, only grandmother said if I'd go to sleep we'd light the tree in the morning and I've been asleep and when I woke up I asked her for a drink and what time it was and she said,

"It's morning, darling, Christmas Morning." So then I heard you and father talking and I came down right away."

"Yes, it is morning," Eleanor said, carrying Tommy to the stairs, but you must go to sleep for another while. Father and mother have both traveled a long, long way since dark, longer than anybody knows, and they need to be alone. And remember, little son, when a strong man is so weary that the tears must come, no one speaks about it, that is what it means to a man."

At the stair top stood The Stranger, and as Eleanor turned he came quickly toward her. Raising her face between his hands he kissed her on the forehead. "Peace, Peace on Earth!" The words sounded to her soul, for he had not spoken.

Then she took off her hat and coat and, leaving them on the rack, went back into the sitting-room, closing the door. At her step coming lightly toward him Vance looked up. Tired and disheveled as he was the marks of many years had vanished from his face and in his eyes there shone a new expression, new yet old.

"Eleanor!" he said, holding out his arms, "Oh, Eleanor, at last I know, I have come home. Is it too late?"

Still standing before him, her hands clasped shyly to her breast, she said in soft low tones that yet were not a whisper.

"Oh, man that I married, why did you stay away so long? Yet how can I be wholly sure that it is really you?"

For answer he caught her up as if she had been a child, and, holding her close, kissed her upon the lips.

When the children came down in the late morning twilight, the tree was already lighted. "For a surprise," Bess cried, though no one would confess to having done it. Without, the snow that had fallen since early morning was bedding down the frozen fields comfortably and draping the great pines in the Glen so that each one was a Christmas tree.

Grandmother and grandfather gathered about the breakfast table with Eleanor and Emery, but the children kept fluttering to and fro from the tree, babbling and going into ecstasies that their last year's tree with its fifty electric lights had not called forth.

"Isn't it beautiful and we fixed it all ourselves," Bess announced for the twentieth time. "It took twelve hard chops to cut it down," added Tommy.

"Where is my Stranger?" piped Bess. "I was going to let him light the tallest candles and now it's lit and he isn't here at all!" Then they all realized that there was an empty place at table.

"Let Tommy go and call him," said grandmother, "he has overslept no doubt, being up late last night and the morning so dark. We must have him ask the Christmas blessing. Hepsy, did you knock at the doctor's door?" she asked.

"There, I nearly forgot to tell you, Miss Vance—the doctor came down early, just as Eli was starting to the village in the sleigh, and he said that as he had urgent business there he would go along. It's most time for them to be back, and I've kept out enough batter for their buckwheat cakes if they are late."

"Come to the workshop with me, Emery, I've something to show you," grandfather said when Tommy could eat no more pancakes and grandmother and Eleanor had gone upstairs to look up wraps and make some immediate plans for Mary Hess. It must be confessed that Emery followed his father, if not with his usual impatience, yet with a sort of reticence born of the regret that he must again disappoint the old man.

Throwing more wood into the Franklin stove, Ira Vance lifted a cloth that had covered his draughting table and, after folding it very deliberately, motioned Emery to sit beside him.

Opening a portfolio holding many carefully made drawings, he laid them in turn slowly before his son. Neither one spoke as the numbered sheets were turned and returned, but a red spot glowed in the middle of each cheek as the old man saw the eagerness that was now coupled with his own attention and handling of the drawings.

While Emery still pored over the plans, Ira hobbled to a long bench that ran across the end of the shop; arranged a screw here, tightened a nut there, adjusted a loose bit of belting; then stooping set in motion a motor that was bedded in the cement floor. At the first hum Emery jumped to his feet, took a long look and clapping hands upon his father's shoulders cried:

"Dad you have done it at last! This screw thread cutter is what we all have been trying for and couldn't get. Do you realize what it means? You've created something. You can sell the patent for a large sum of money, Dad!"

It seemed as if the old man had grown a foot, as with head well thrown back he looked his son fairly in the face, "I have no thought of selling, it is enough for me if you believe that your father is not a failure! As for the praise, that belongs to your mother, who has always had faith in me, as well as God's own patience coupled with understanding."

Ah! how the words smote Emery. What had he himself done but dominate men by force of circumstances until they had sold him their intelligence, but had never won even their friendship, while his father, given over as he had thought to dreams, had become an absolute creator.

Then before him flashed one of those concentrations that are called visions. In it Vance saw the cloud that still shadowed him—the Annual Meeting and its warfare—fade away by compromise. He saw his resignation accepted and his interest liquidated in consideration of the transfer to him of certain patents in which he believed. He saw new foundries following the valley stream that in turn supplied them with electric power. He saw Joseph Hess as once more his draughtsman. He saw new cottages replacing the deserted shacks above the Glen. He saw his work so near his home that Eleanor could hold her share in both with him. He saw breathing time ahead, time to know his children and aid in their development, and last of all, he saw himself once more trampling the autumn leaves beneath his feet with a dog at his heels as he walked through the woods breathing in the fragrance that follows the first frost.

Resting his hand upon his father's sleeve he voiced what he had seen. "Will you take me in partnership, father, shall it be Ira Vance & Son?"

For a moment the old man leaned on his cane, his familiar attitude, and then he looked up and it seemed as if the Promised Land was reflected in his eyes.

"To have the empty houses rebuilt and peopled, the chapel open again for our own community, my old hope coming true! Surely Emery, surely you are not trifling with me?"

"No! on my word, father. Yesterday my secretary told me, after I had promised her more pay, that she preferred to leave and live. Last night I made up my mind that for the same reason I would send in my resignation."

"Then, Emery, the name of our firm must be 'Ira & Elizabeth Vance & Son'." So this is how it stands today upon the letter heads.

"Where is Dr. Amunde? Where can The Stranger be?" said Eleanor, as the morning wore away and the snow began to pile about the bushes in fantastic drifts.

"I see Eli in the sleigh coming over the rise," Vance answered, "but there is no one with him."

Yes, Eli had returned alone and presently came into the kitchen, where after some hunting he pulled a note from his pocket. "The doctor was called away, one one was waiting for him at the inn and he gave me this," Eli said.

Taking the note, Eleanor returned to the sitting-room where Emery was preparing to go out. It was addressed to "Emery and Eleanor Vance — by messenger." The paper was very thin and the folded letter, damp from the snow, clung together, not opening easily. Shaking it out toward the fire very carefully that the dampness might dry the quicker, Eleanor read:

"When heedlessly shut out, Love often knocks as a stranger at the Gate of Understanding, the only way for his return. The gate is open! Do not let it close."

"Look at this, Emery!" she said, her eyes dilating strangely as he read, glancing over her shoulder.

At that moment the door flew open, the children rioting in, all agog with snowball making, and the wind that followed them snatching the paper from Eleanor whirled it up the chimney with the flames.

"Who is this Stranger?" said Emery slowly, looking off into the distance with half closed eyes. "What was he? There is something about his coming and his going, his quiet comprehension, that I cannot fathom, cannot understand."

For answer Eleanor pressed her finger to her lips whispering "I know!"

"Mother," said Bess, running to Eleanor and putting a hand to each side of her face that she might be very sure to gain attention, "it's the nicest time we've ever had and, Mother, if Tommy and I should be ever so good and kind, do you think the Star would show us where to find a Christ-baby to keep for our very own next year?"

"I wonder?" Eleanor answered, bending with veiled eyes to kiss the child.

MORE LICENSE PLATES ADDED TO HANSCOM COLLECTION

Ray Hanscom of Greenwood, who is making the license plate collection, was surprised and pleased last week to receive three new plates.

The plates were from the city of Sao Paulo, chief city of the state of Sao Paulo in the United States of Brazil, South America.

How anyone so far away heard of the collection is a mystery unless a copy of the Bethel Citizen or the Advertiser Democrat got that far from home. Both of these little papers carried an account of this collection.

One of these plates is made of heavy metal with unraised blue figures on a white background. The number is 743. On first inspection the number appears to be all there is on the plate, but a closer examination shows stamped in very fine letters, "Inspector Gera 1913."

The second plate is made of aluminum or some similar metal. The background is red but the figures are the natural metal. It is a 1931 plate, number 16-270.

The third plate is a 1937 plate number 2-73-08. It is white with black figures. The Sao Paulo coat of arms is shown in red.

On both the 1931 and 1937 plates there is a small figure one between the S. P. and the date, probably to distinguish the district or county.

MOUNTAIN VIEW GRANGE

The lecture given by Mr. Babb of the State Department of Agriculture at the Mountain View Grange, Gilead, last Wednesday, Aug. 24, was well attended. There were several from Bethel, as well as Deputy Davis, his wife and his mother of Bryant Pond.

Mr. Babb took his audience on a trip through the Maine woods and countryside; showing them their feathered friends on colored slides, and telling of their various tricks and habits. He told of his different experiences with them, of the birds which are helpful and those that are not so good. One of his interesting facts is an estimation that the birds of Maine eat at least 4000 carloads of insects a year.

We should do all we can to aid and protect our birds with houses, shelters and food. A bell on a cat will save the birds and will not hinder it in catching mice.

A bedspread having designs of the state flowers was won by Fred Cole. This brought in $9.10 which is to aid the stage fund.

Gordon was elected treasurer of the organ fund. A committee was also formed to draw up plans All those wanting a part in eliminating this debt please hand to the pastor. All contributions gratefully received.
